Sex Trafficking on Oahu

This is the third study in a series of research studies exploring sex trafficking in Hawai‘i. The first study conducted in 2018 explored the scope of the online sex buyer market. The online buyer market was found to be robust with many thousands of sex buyers looking for sex online every day in Hawai‘i. The second study was completed in 2019 and explored the stories of 22 female sex trafficking survivors who were sex trafficked in Hawai‘i. The victims were from Oahu and Hawai‘i Island and were 77.3 percent Native Hawaiian. The survivors’ stories included their recruitment experiences, their violent victimizations by their families, traffickers, and customers, and the involvement of systems including law enforcement, medical services, and schools that did not identify or respond to their victimization.

This study aims to build on the first two studies with a large scale survey (the Youth Experiences Survey (YES) Hawai‘i) of sex trafficking experiences among clients at a large social service agency in Hawai‘i. During three months in 2019, 363 individuals on five Hawaiian Islands completed an eight page paper and pencil survey about their childhood and adult experiences including their sex trafficking victimization.
